Reading Comprehension

Happiness and the Bride

Once upon a time, three brides all lived together happily in one family and never quarreled. One day Happiness came to talk to the oldest bride. “My dear girl, I am to leave your family, so I would like to give you whatever you want before I go.” “Well,” said the oldest, “give me lots of wealth and go wherever you want.” Happiness gave her everything she wanted and then went to the middle bride. “My dear, I am leaving and before we say goodbye to each other, you may ask me for whatever you want and you will get it.” “Good,” the middle bride replied. “If you are leaving anyway, just give me lots of money and then you are free to go.” Happiness gave the money to the middle bride and then went to the youngest. “My dear, I have to leave but please ask me for whatever you want before I do.” Ask for gold or silver, I’ll give you anything.” “It is very bad that you are leaving,” the younger bride replied sadly. “I want neither gold, nor silver. I just want you to give us health and friendship. All the rest we can achieve ourselves.” “If this is the only thing you want, I think I don’t have to leave. I will stay in your house for good,” said Happiness. Time passed and the elder brides spent all their money. They had to ask the younger bride for help and she never refused. As for the younger bride, she lived in happiness for the rest of her life.
